Led by the Maasai -- the semi-nomadic tribe known for their distinctive customs and dress -- the six-night journey into Loita Naimina Enkiyo Forest, aka "the Forest of the Lost Child", so maybe find a sitter instead of bringing any babies for the trip.

For the first three nights, you'll explore the forest with the Maasai as they regale you with traditional knowledge of the land, like how to gather materials, and why they continue to hunt for sustenance (Hint: it's to survive!). The back half is spent at the Maasai Mara nature reserve, where you'll come in contact with large wildlife including lions, elephants, and black rhinos.

At night, you'll rough it in well-furnished tents and mobile units complete with all the standard safari amenities, like carpeting, delicious meals, and plenty of booze.
