If you've been watching Deals of the Week lately, you've seen some very nice trans-Atlantic airfares.

This week, for example, Finnair round-trip fares between New York's JFK and Helsinki are offered starting at $735. It wouldn't be unusual to pay that much for a one-way fare between North America and Europe during high season.

Another Scandinavia-based airline, Norwegian, offers fares starting at \$296 one-way between Fort Lauderdale and London.

Fares like these frequently come with strings attached. The lowest of prices for your desired route might not exist on the dates you wish to travel.

That said, this is the time of year to consider off-season travel to Europe. Crowds are smaller, hotel prices generally fall, and lines will be shorter at popular attractions.

If you book a great trans-Atlantic airfare, leave a comment and let us know about it.
