

7 International Destinations For Fall Foliage

by Holly Riddle on Oct. 10, 2015

Photo: © Ahmad Hafiz Ismail | Dreamstime.com

You may immediately think of New England when someone mentions breathtaking fall foliage, but you can still enjoy the colors of the season while trekking around the globe. From New Zealand (above) to the Netherlands, here are 7 international leaf peeping locations that will woo any fall aficionado.

♥ ADD TO FAVORITES | SUBSCRIBE | SHARE | PRINT | Like 130 | Tweet 2 | October 10, 2015

Photo: © Denis Pepin | Dreamstime.com

Quebec's Mont-Tremblant isn't only great for skiing — it's also a beautiful location for cycling, hiking and camping among the vividly changing leaves. Go to the Tourisme Mont-Tremblant web page to check out their color index tracker, which tells guests when the trees have reached their maximum color potential.

Photo: © Sara Winter | Dreamstime.com

The picturesque woodlands near Dunkeld, Scotland have hosted such famous visitors throughout history as Queen Victoria and William Wordsworth. You'll definitely want to visit Ossian's Hall, which overlooks the Black Linn waterfall for a perfect photo op!

Photo: © Dennis Van De Water | Dreamstime.com

De Hoge Veluwe National Park, located almost right in the middle of the Netherlands, offers an amazing amount of history, wildlife, architecture and more. From hiking and cycling to dining and museums, the park offers something for every visitor, regardless of the time of year.

Photo: © Radu Razvan Gheorghe | Dreamstime.com

This quaint rural setting in Romania is far from the imagined haunts of Dracula. The Ramet Gorge and surrounding areas, near Ramet Monastery and the Cheia village, are popular with hikers and tourists. The area is a bit out of the way for most travelers, however — about a six-hour drive from Bucharest.

Photo: © Eakakeek | Dreamstime.com

Füssen, a small town in the south of Germany, near the Austrian border, is home to two beautiful castles — Hohenschwangau and Neuschwanstein — which only add to the fairytale scenery. Tour the castles and their surrounding mountains and lakes for a both romantic and historic experience.

Photo: © Luciano Mortula | Dreamstime.com

Kyoto is easily recognized as one of the most beautiful fall foliage destinations. The temple pictured above is Kyomizu-dera, which originated in the eighth century, and is dedicated to the Buddhist Goddess of Mercy. Located in the eastern part of the city, on Otowa Mountain, the temple is a popular tourist attraction, particularly in the fall.

Photo: © Anatoliy Samara | Dreamstime.com

Prague is a perfect city to visit in the fall, when you can often find fewer crowds and milder temperatures. The foliage peaks in November and you'll discover plenty of public parks with panoramic views of the city, as well as nearby forests that are easily accessible via public transportation.