Choosing Canada's most beautiful national parks feels a bit like deciding between the best chocolate or cashmere—the world's second-biggest country in terms of land mass has almost too much spectacular scenery to single out favorites. But someone has to do the hard work, and so, we've narrowed down the roster of 44 national parks to spotlight eleven whose flora, fauna, terrain, and topography astonish, from Alberta's serene Banff to Yukon's extreme Kluane.

Parc National de la Gaspésie, Quebec

With 25 peaks more than a thousand meters (3,280 feet) high, Quebec's colossal "sea of mountains" boasts a singular climate where arctic and alpine plants have carved a habitat for rare herds of woodland caribou, along with moose, white-tailed deer, and 150 bird species. But it's the soaring peaks that captivate here, stretching, surreally, across every vista.
